AI Declaration

The index.html page was coded by me (with reference to a tutorial for product display, the contacts page, navbar design and cart design). The tutorial playlist will be linked below). Code was then copied over from my index.html page to other pages to show products (i.e in the product details page, the specific products under each category box), the header/navbar was always copied over from the index.html page.

Once basic formatting was completed in the index.html page (with one heading, one container, one product), these formats were copied over to the linked pages in the navbar and their contents changed to keep format consistent. From there onwards, autocompletion was mainly used to apply inline CSS changes to multiple items of the same format.

AI was used for assistance in moving contents to certain parts of the screen (the payment details box moved under the delivery details box rather than have all three boxes/containers in a row). Other placement issues like struggling with specific style tags to justify/move/wrap content was assisted by AI as well (placement was the main issue for products appearing in a row or with flex displays like in the checkout.html).

Other than some placement issues, design ideas such as colour palettes, images, icons were all found through the recommended websites in the Tutorial document and the logo was created by me in Canva. Layout followed a simple navbar/header with the body of the page. A footer was not created as I had no idea what to display with the minimal information I had come up with on the shop I created (this is also why the About Me does not contain much information) with some layout inspiration also coming from the tutorial playlist.
